THE ROOM WITH A SEA VIEW

A tourist enters a hotel and asks to stay in a room for a few days.

The hotel concierge agrees and tells him that the price of the room is 50 euros per night.

The tourist asks if it would be possible to stay in a room with a sea view, but the concierge tells him that all rooms with a sea view have a sea view.

replies that all the rooms with a sea view are already occupied.

The tourist insists whether it is still possible to stay in one of the sea view rooms, but the doorman again replies that all the rooms with a sea view are already occupied.

Once again the tourist asks if there was any possibility of staying in one of the rooms with a sea view, and this time the concierge replies that there is, but that the price of an overnight stay would be much higher.

The tourist then asks how much it would cost to stay in one of the rooms with a sea view.
of the rooms with a sea view.

The porter replies that, in that case, the price would be EUR 50 million.

The tourist was very surprised by this answer and asked why there was such a big difference in the price of an overnight stay.

great difference in the price of the overnight stay.

At this point, the concierge replies that in order to offer him a room with a sea view, it would be necessary to demolish all the buildings between the hotel and the sea.

THE GREAT RIDE

Strolling through the streets of the corso, two friends stop in front of a movie poster entitled entitled 'The Big Ride'.

Immediately, the two friends decide to go to the cinema to see the film.

Once in the theatre, the film starts. Throughout the first half, you see the same scene of two horses, one white and one black.

horses, one white and one black, grazing on a green meadow.

The second half scene is practically the same as the first half, but before you get the end of the film, it is not clear why, it could have been because of the wind, maybe a bee, maybe something else, the two horses start running wild.

After a few minutes from the start of the race, one of the two friends, partly out of boredom, partly also out of a feeling of defiance, tells the other friend that he wants to bet that the black horse will finish first.

The other friend accepts the bet, claiming instead that the white horse will arrive first.

After about ten minutes of continuous head-to-head, at the end of the film the white horse is seen coming first.

Promptly, the friend who had bet on the black horse congratulates the winning friend, but the friend who had won the bet immediately says he cannot accept those congratulations because he had already seen that film the day before and already knew that the white horse first.

At this point, even the friend who had bet on the losing horse admits that he had seen that same film in the previous days.

The other friend then asks him why, since he too knew the final scene of the film, he had decided to bet on the black horse.

Then, the friend, with a good-natured air, replies that at that moment the black horse had seemed to him fitter.
